MN dental group hits oral health practitioner bills

Associated Press - April 26, 2009 1:24 PM ET

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - The Minnesota Dental Association is running ads aimed at taking a bite out of legislation that would create a midlevel class of dental practitioners.

Critics of the campaign say it amounts to scare tactics.

The print and online ads target bills moving through the House and Senate that would allow oral health practitioners - or OHP's - to provide basic dental services, with supervision by or collaboration with dentists.

The Safety Net Coalition calls the dental association's campaign "misleading" and "sensational" because it implies that OHPs put patients at risk. The group says that OHPs merely would serve low-income Minnesotans who have limited access to dental care.

Opponents of the bill warn of unsupervised practitioners performing such dental procedures as teeth-pulling without medical training.
