

FRONTLINE EMPLOYEE

JUNE • 2020

LONELINESS AS A HEALTH CONCERN

"Flattening the curve" with social distancing is the worldwide intervention being used to reduce coronavirus infections and death, but it has also created social isolation. For millions, social isolation is a risk factor for loneliness, and loneliness is a demonstrated health concern. Are you feeling the effects of loneliness? We're not talking about "Zoom fatigue" but symptoms such as low self-esteem, depression, anger, nightmares, anxiety, and easily triggered anger at loved ones, to name a few. Humans are hard-wired to be social creatures, so when they are deprived of the innate biological desire to engage with others, physical symptoms result. Symptoms of loneliness feel as if they are of mental origin, but they are physiologically driven, according to researchers. Before the coronavirus pandemic, loneliness was hot research news. Medical researchers call it the "new smoking" because of its adverse health effects. Note that loneliness is not equal to being alone. Loneliness is your body saying, "Find people with whom to socially interact!" The inability to get to your favorite gym, gather with friends at a favorite hangout, or mingle with coworkers who bring meaning to your life can have natural health consequences. Learning about loneliness is a key lesson of our collective experience with the coronavirus. Social distancing is likely to end in the future, but connecting to a mental health counselor now—even if it means one more Zoom session to do it—is worth the effort if it can help you lessen the impact of loneliness.

Learn more at www.news.gallup.com [Search: "adults less worry"]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Loneliness As A Health
Concern • P. 1

Curb Impulse Purchases To Save Money • P. 2

You're Committed, So Show It
• P. 2

Fried Foods & Focus
Don't Mix • P. 2

CURB IMPULSE PURCHASES TO SAVE MONEY

If the household budget is stretched, cutting costs without added hardship can be difficult. Consider curbing impulse purchases as a path to finding more dollars. You could save over $5,000 a year by decreasing this behavior. Impulse purchasing is the tendency to engage repeatedly in spontaneous, on-the-spot purchases without consideration of the potential consequences. Sixty-four percent of us do it. The risk of an impulse purchase begins as soon as you enter a store, not when you see the item of interest. Most impulse purchases are groceries, not clothing. Try these tips: 1) Shop with a buddy. 2) Use cash. 3) Gain control and insight from two studies: A) www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc [search "eyes wide shopped"] and B) www.slickdeals.net/corp/impulse-spending.html.

YOU'RE COMMITTED, SO SHOW IT

Employers know what a committed worker looks like. It's not those who simply perform duties and assignments well. Committed workers bring something extra that helps advance the work unit's mission. 1) They solve problems; they don't just point them out. 2) They show enthusiasm rather than casual acceptance. 3) They are proactive in reporting progress on what they are doing. 4) They demonstrate initiative—they act on perceived needs that fit with their duties before being asked. If you want to show you are a committed worker, walk the talk with these distinguishing work habits.

FRIED FOODS & FOCUS DON'T MIX

Skip the burger and fries at lunch. You will have a clearer head and better focus in the afternoon. New research shows one meal of fried food high in fat can zap your ability to stay focused on an important task or project shortly after it is consumed. At work, that means choosing fewer fatty and fried foods at lunch in favor of more nutritious choices may help you score that big win or big deal, or deliver a more effective presentation!